Milly's Walk

It was a Sunday morning when Milly woke up and got out of her warm, cosy bed. She got dressed, brushed her teeth and ~~and~~ ate egg on toast for breakfast. It was delicious and she had a glass of cold water too. Milly decided to go for a walk because she wanted to see the cows that lived in the fields near her house. She opened the front door and stepped outside. "What a beautiful sunny day!" Milly said excitedly.

As she walked along the dusty path, Milly heard a rumbling noise. She wasn't sure what it was at first but all of a sudden a huge, white aeroplane went zooming across the sky! "How loud it is!" shrieked Milly. She waved and carried on walking.

After a little while, Milly arrived at the field and walked by the black fence that kept the cows safe. Milly looked around curiously. The cows normally eat the tasty, green grass but she couldn't see them. Suddenly, Milly noticed something. "Oh no!" she gasped. The gate on the other side of the field was closed so the cows couldn't get in!

"I know, I'll find the farmer and ask him to open the gate." said Milly. The farmer's house was next to the field and Milly knocked on the door. "Hello," said the farmer sleepily. "Hello, could you please open the gate for the cows? They are ~~hungry~~ hungry." Milly asked politely. "Of course, I had fallen asleep!" the farmer replied. He walked to the gate, opened it and the cows walked through to the field. "Thank you!" cried Milly. She ~~She~~ They watched as the cows ate the grass. "How happy they are!" smiled Milly. Milly and the farmer said goodbye to the cows and they both went home. The End.
